DIRECTOR’S NOTES

The impetus for this project came from my fear of graduation, of the unknown. I wanted to establish a community of like-minded people with the hope of collectively making contemporary theatre. Through this process, I feel as though I’ve been able to realize that community - through my work with Lyndsey, Sarah, Amy, and Ann Marie - as well as with the wonderful actors, some of whom you will see in this piece, and others who have aided the process along the way.

I believe that this new play process offers a unique opportunity to consider how performative interventions can be consciously worked into a script, with the ultimate goal of provoking community and coalition building by illustrating a gender performance that is not quite here. While that might sound a bit heady and theoretical, I am grateful to have found the perfect collaborator in Lyndsey - a playwright who shares my affinity for theoretical musings but who also possesses a unique talent for translating her frameworks into beautiful and poignant stories - like the one you will see tonight.

Please keep in mind that what you are about to see is a workshop, rather than a fully realized production of Spitfire. Over the past three weeks, Lyndsey and I have worked in the room, alongside the actors for this project, to think through, talk about, and develop the script. While we are excited to present this production in its present form, truly, the most important thing to us is a process. Our fingers are crossed that Spitfire will have a long life beyond Williams College. I am honored to have been trusted with the work in its current form.

With love,
Fiona
CONTENTS WARNING

At its core, Spitfire: a space femme fantasia is a play about failed utopias that explores young love and attempts a queering of space history. The cast and team behind this production would like to acknowledge the difficult nature of some of the material present in Spitfire. We believe that this is an important story to tell, one that resonates beyond the walls of the ‘62 Center, and we invite audiences to engage with these themes safely, enjoyably, and productively.

It is important to us that you have enough information to consent to this experience. Spitfire includes depictions of disordered eating habits and mentions of rape and sexual harassment. If you have questions about the material covered or would like additional details to support your safe engagement with the content, please reach out to Fiona Selmi (ffs2@williams.edu).

If students would like additional support as you process this production, the Spitfire team recommends contacting:

Special Thanks

Mira Sneirson, Kara Hadden, Tobi Delgado, Vanessa Silva, Tali Natter, and Dylan Nadelman for participating in an earlier reading of Spitfire
The culmination of two semesters of work, this presentation of the short film, What I Is?, explores the media of theatre and film the constructed nature of the self through performance. It is the story of a Creator who tries to preserve himself through his work and a Character who refuses to be contained.
CENTERSERIES IN COLLABORATION WITH WILLIAMS COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART PRESENTS

JAMES & JEROME

INK: A PIECE FOR MUSEUMS

AN ORIGINAL, CREATIVE ZOOM LECTURE IN CELEBRATION OF THE WCMA COLLECTION

James & Jerome (James Harrison Monroe and Jerome Ellis) have spent years combining electronic music and the art lecture form to explore museum collections in an imaginative new way. In November 2019, NYC-based musician-storytellers James & Jerome were artists-in-residence at the Williams College Museum of Art. Along with media designer Shawn Duan, they explored the museum’s collection, drawing inspiration from objects across centuries and global cultures.

This was all intended to build to a run of live performances in the auditorium of WCMA this spring. Now, instead, on May 6th the artists will transform the essence of their work into a zoom lecture/musical experience. Susan Sontag famously wrote, “in place of a hermeneutics, we need an erotica of art.” This will be a way of exploring that idea.
